PROLOGUE

Records are singularly scanty in regard to schools and schooling in the Chester of pre-Revolution days. As far as can be learned there was no regular school in the borough before 1770. Up to this time the teaching of the three R's was done by an occasional private teacher; or, what is more likely, by the missionaries in charge of St. Paul's parish, instruction in reading and writing being enjoined upon clergymen working under the auspices of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts.

In 1769, Joseph Hoskins provided by will for the gift of land for a school site at the intersection of the streets now known as Fifth and Weish. His neighbors at some time in the following year erected a "long" building, which was used for school purposes for more than half a century. Both during and after this period there were various private schools in operation, report having it that one such school existed for some years in the Court House itself.

Because, therefore, the Court House has been associated with the history of education in this city, the Committee in charge of the Anniversary Celebration has considered it advisable to portray just such a school session as may have been held in the old building. In order to represent school customs, methods, and equipment of the colonial period, the time for the little sketch has been set at 1770. The names given the pupils of this make-believe school are names of real boys and girls who lived in the Borough at this time, and who, very probably, learned their ab's under the same teachers in Old Chester.

Lafayette's Return.

(Written by the late Henry Graham Ashmead

It was Tuesday evening, October 5, 1824, that General Lafayette, then the Nation's guest, was received at Chester. The steamboat which brought the noted Frenchman was chartered for the occasion, and among those who accompanied him hither were Governor John A. Shulze and staff, General Cadwallader and staff, a committee of the Council of Philadelphia, the marshal of the United States and a number of prominent gentlemen, together with the "Washington Grays," commanded by Captain C. G. Shields, who were detailed as a guard of honor. The First City Troop had marched to Chester that day, reaching here about sunset, and had established their headquarters at the Eagle Tavern, now the City Hotel, then kept by Mrs. Polly Engle.

SYNOPSIS

George True, suitor of Molly March, is rejected by her family because having been adopted in infancy, his parentage is in doubt. He appeals to Deborah Logan the "female historian" of her time, and well known for her generous helpful and hospitable spirit, to help him trace a lost packet of papers that will identify him.

Anne Davis keeps the Apothecary shop on Third street just below Market (then called High street) assisted by her three daughters who "had refused to wed" that they might help and care for their aged mother who had consumption for 60 years.

Anne Davis is thought to have bought an old desk from George's foster parents and Deborah Logan's visit is to ask that George may search the old desk for some secret compartment.

Anne Davis says, "Deborah, thee was always good at finding things. It was thee who found the records of the Upland Court that had been lost a hundred years. Go and see what thee can find before he comes."

Historical Background of the Story of "Deborah Logan's Visit"

Deborah Norris was born in Philadelphia in 1761. After the death of her father in 1766 she came with her mother to Chester where she lived until her marriage in 1781 to Dr. George Logan, grandson of James Logan, Penn's Secretary and personal friend. She resided at the Logan family seat, "Stenton," Philadelphia, until her death in 1889.

She mingled freely with the leading spirits of the Revolutionary period. Her cousin, Charles Thomson, was confidential secretary of the Continental Congress. She was noted for her literary ability and acknowledged "the Female Historian of Colonial Times." In 1814 she copied the correspondence of Wm. Penn and James Logan. Her manuscripts were printed by the Historical Society of Pennsylvania and John F. Watson's "Annals of Philadelphia," were largely founded upon her letters. She discovered in an old bookcase, belonging to her grandfather the original records of the Upland Court, which had been lost for a century.

Joseph Parker, her grandfather, emigrated from England to Chester when 25 years old "to escape the rigor and hard usage of a mother-in-law." He entered the office of Judge David Lloyd as secretary and later held many public offices, Register and Recorder of Chester County, Prothonotary of the Courts, Clerk of the Peace and in 1738 was commissioned Justice of the Peace. The record states "he was much respected by the government and his fellow citizens."

Anne Davis, with her three daughters, kept the only Apothecary Shop in Chester at that time. Anne Davis was a daughter of John Bethel, who emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1693 and was a member of the Assembly representing Chester County when he died. The Apothesary shop was on Third street, where the Colonade Hotel now stands. The story of "Deborah Logan's Visit" with historical references and many quotations from her letters, has been written by Mrs. F. M. Smith and will be presented by members of the Delaware County Federation of Women's Clubs.

Scene—Joseph Parker's office temporarily located in the Court House during the year 1760. Parker was for many years Sheriff of the County and was later succeeded by his assistant, Henry Hale Graham.

Parker and Graham while awaiting the appearance of Grace Lloyd, escorted by her friend, Joseph Hoskins, discuss the prominent and influential standing of David Lloyd. Mention is made of the many political and judicial positions he held and of the fine mansion he occupied.

Grace Lloyd having arrived, Parker and Hoskins depart and Henry H. Graham proceeds with the business which has brought Grace Lloyd hither, the drawing up of her will with its many interesting bequests. Not only are these bequests interesting because of their quaintness but because several were at that time public benefactions.

This meeting, held in July, 1774, for the purpose of aiding the Boston sufferers, discloses local opinion regarding the Stamp Act and the cargoes of tea shipped here by England. The ladies of the borough busily knitting, sewing and spinning, agree that forthwith they shall wear only clothing of home manufacture but no definite action can be agreed upon regarding teadrinking since most of the ladies are Friends and extremely conservative. During the meeting Abigail Price sings the Boston parody on John Dickinson's "Liberty Song" and Sarah Coupland recites a Colonial verse on tea.

Washington's Visit.

Written by the late Henry Graham Ashmead

On Monday, April 20, 1789, Washington, then on his way to New York to be inaugurated President of the United States, reached Chester at 7 o'clock in the morning and breakfasted at the Washington House. He was accompanied by General Thomas Mifflin, Governor of Pennsylvania, Judge Richard Peters, the Speaker of the Assembly, and the First City Troop of Philadelphia, as a guard of honor, who had met the President-elect at Naaman's creek, the State line, whither he had been escorted by the authorities of the State of Delaware. Washington traveled to Chester in a coach and four, attended by Colonel David Humphreys, his aid, and Charles Thomson, "the perpetual secretary of Congress," who had been dispatched to Mount Vernon to officially notify the General of his election to the Presidency, Thomson was well-known in Chester, his first wife. Mary, being the daughter of John Mather, a noted resident here in the last century. The inhabitants of the town flocked to the tavern to see the distinguished guests and the village urchins gazed with admiration as the troops rode into the yard, the jingling of swords the champing of the bits by the horses, the showy uniforms of the men and the blare of the trumpet combined to produce a picture in the memories of the young that could never be effaced. The address of welcome to Washington, by Dr. Wm. Martin, the Chief Burgess, and the unostentatious response by the President-elect, constituted an event of marvelous importance to the town. After the breakfast at the Washington House, Washington ordered his coach to the rear, and mounting a white horse, the gift of the citzens of Darby, rode up Market street, and out the King's highway.

PROLOGUE

Trial of "Sandy Flash"

The Declaration of Independence was made on July 4, 1776. For more than a year prior to this time, the American colonies had been in open warfare with Great Britain

This conflict terminated with the Treaty at Paris made in 1782. The intervening six or seven years have yielded abundantly to the romantic literature of the time.

One of the most interesting products of this period was James Fitzpatrick known as "Sandy Flash" or "Captain Fitz," who was executed September 21, 1778, at intersection of Providence and Edgmont Roads, Chester. A native of the County of Chester, as then constituted, he was at the head of a band of desperate men, or soldiers of fortune, who were at one time members of the Continental Army and at other times engaged in Guerilla warfare upon the wealthy whigs of the neighborhood. The people of the community at that time were divided into two classes. The Patriots, or Rebels, who were sympathetic with the cause of the Continental Army and the Tories, or Loyalists, who were allied with his Majesty George the Third. The public conduct of Fitz was equally mixed with chivalry and bravado. He was an American "Robin Hood" who limited his depreciations to the wealthy Whigs and from whom the Tories and impoverished Whigs were entirely safe.

There is no record that he ever molested a Tory or a poor Whig or that he ever profited personally from any of the forages of which he was the leader.

He was a man of great physical courage and strength, whose horsemanship was the admiration of the neighborhood and his many deeds of daring have made him the attractive subject of much local literature.

Part of his career is involved in the "Story of Kennett" by Bayard Taylor, and he is the subject of an interesting book by Captain Clifton Lisle. The incidents of his career and of his conviction which occurred in this old Court House September 15, 1778, are compiled in part from these books and from the well known historical writings of the late Henry Graham Ashmead, the late John Hill Martin and the late George Smith, M. D.

The Colonial Archives, Pennsylvania Gazette, and records of the early days of the Commissioners of the Commonwealth, have also yielded much valuable information.
